SOLDIER'S LIFE.

An English artist, who entered the Tuscan revolutionary army, thus writes, dating his letter, "Massa, June

We have seen hitherto only the bright side of a campaign and a man blessed with health and a cheerful disposition cannot hesitate to proclaim it the most delightful existence in the world. We are up in the morning with the first break of daylight, and enjoy thus the sweets of that refreshing morning hou-one of the greatest blessings of which civilization has robbed-the present generation of munkind. For an hour or so, all is apparent confusion in the camp. Drums and trumpets and military bands strike up in all the neighboring fields, with but little regard to their neighbor's tune or time. The trumpets are a thought too shill and frequently out of tune. The bunds evidently think that musical effects lie in the loudest possible noise. Luckily, for over-fastidious cars, there is room for ever so great a variety of sounds in the pure broad caropy of heaven, and all those discordant tunes, blended in the air through the vastuers of space, send up a melody which Heaven may accept as our morning hymna. Presently every man musters under the standard. The officers i-sue forth from hotels and private lodgings. We all full into our ranks with natural ease, and off we are in loose massescavalry and light lout, then regiments of the line, seven batteries, and an endless luggage and campt am. Acon the Prince rides forth at the head of his bulliant stuff; forth he rides lessurely, with a mild, benignant smile on his smooth, rosy, and rather well-led coun enance. His nides-de-camp are rather more hollow-cheeked, bronzed, height-eyed, breathing intelligence and resolution. More than one of them are Corsicans--there is no mistaking the dark-flashing eye, the high, commanding, somewhat flerce, brow.— Last, but not least, either in his cwo or the world's estimation, comes his Imperial Highness's chaptain-general, or great almoner, a dapper, long-robed, proud looking prelate, anounted on a steek; black, ambling steed, which the Prior Aymer in "Ivanhoe" might have envied. By pride of look and commanding seat on the suddle, the chaplain might easily exchange places with the Prince.

We squeeze ourselves up, of course to make room for our chief and his brilliant retinue; but these royal Our hors s set up thalling neglis, and champ on the at, cager to follow the galant cavalcade as it passes upon the trot.

The sweet morning bour ! Yesterday's dust, laid asleep by the heavy Italian dews, has not yet been awak-ead ty the first sun rays. We ride on a noffled ground as if on a curpt. The flue, too, are still asleep-those cruel, inseparable traveling compan-ions, who drove us and our chargers mad during yesterday's long, toilsome, noisoma, suthing hor murch. Our road like a ong one of the most picturesque regions in romaintic Italy. The Carregions in romantic Italy. The Carrara mountains, all sugged and rugged at the summit—those famous in isses of white marble waten the Remans called the Apoun Alps, and Dante mentions as the Monti di Luna-are on our right, and their green slope, planted all over with the famous ofives of which Lucca oil is made, come down steep and abrupt aimost to the rondeide.

On our left is the green plain, a on our fert is the green pann, a narrow strip of land to dering on the seashere, and on the swelling ground we catch glin has so it the blue Tyrrhenian Sea. SHOCKING FLUID ACCIDENT.-Another of those shocking accidents have occurred by the careiess use of fluid, by which one woman was butned to death, and her sis ter rereasiy n jurd. It appears that Capt. LOCAL INTELLIGENCE.

THE MEETING TO-NIGHT.

An adjourned meeting of the citizens, to con sider various matters connected with the proposed Re-Union on the 23d of August, takes place in the State House to-night. We trust our fellow citizens will need no urging to bring them up to this meeting, knowing as we do, that the lack of numbers at the previous meetthat the leak of numbers at the previous meeting was from a an misunderstanding in relation to the object of the meeting. There is much feeling in the community, and that feeling is, that this thing must succeed. There is no end to committees and sub-committees appointed to carry forward the arrangements, and besides these, it is expected that every man will be a "committee of one" to do what he can to urge forward the preparations for this the greates celebration Newport has ever known. here must not, there can not, be any such word as fail. The word has gone abroad, from Maine to Mexico, that there is to be a gathering of the Sons and Daughters of Newport in this city on the 23d of August; those sons and daughters on the 23d of August; those cons and daughters Mademe Ouarnier is, as may be repected, will come; they have cought the spirit of the a perfect swimmer, and takes an active in, occasion and they cannot stay away. It only terest in all the proceedings. remains for us to make the necessary arrange ments for t cir entertainment while here. Let us see to it that these are of the most ample шagnitude.

There are several questions connected with this celebration which should be de ided at once, as they have some of them already given rise to much discussion. Among these are the following: Shall it be a more local matter, confined exclusively to the natives of Newport, or embrace those of the whole State? Whether a colletion or chawder will be most appropriate. How we shall manage to discriminate between the true natives of Newport and those who will falsely claim to be such for that occasion only, to answer their own selfish ends. These and other questions of equal importunce should be decided at once. And then we should have the programme, for which oveybody is looking with auxious eyes, and for which many are waiting before they will put their hand to the matter.

Mr. William H. Harvey has one of the snuggost, prettiest little pleasure yachts for sailing parties in Newport harbor. Of swan like proportions and first-rate sailing qualities, she dances over the waves like a thing of life. With an agreeable party of ladies and gentle men, on a moonlight evening, a sail in Mr. Harvey's jacht is a luxury indeed. We experienced both last evening, which after the cares and toils of the day was to us like the cool evening breeze that succeeds a hot summer day. Mr. H. has justly christoned his little craft " Poorlers.
